That Give WAS BIG!

Hundreds of congregants heard the call: We needed to reach out to the less fortunate among us, especially in these difficult times. It was also important to mark the 20th anniversary of the founding of the Temple Campus food pantry and the inauguration of our new partnership with a pantry in Santa Monica. Wilshire Boulevard Temple did as we always do when it comes to acts of tikkun olam (repairing the world)—we made a big difference, not just for the 1,000 recipients of Thanksgiving dinner baskets, but also for ourselves, reaching out hand to hand and heart to heart at First AME Church and L.A. Central City Community Church on Skid Row.

Of all the stories surrounding “The Big Give,” none is sweeter than that of two girls from our Mann Family Early Childhood Center Nursery School. Gabriella and Sophie wanted to raise money for our project and decided to make giant cookies, Rice Krispies treats, and lemonade to sell at their stand. The girls invited friends to join them for a fun-filled day of working the lemonade stand. Gabriella, Sophie, and their friends demonstrated great teamwork, and at the end of the day, the Tenenbaum girls were thrilled to find they raised $250. On Monday morning at school they donated the money with pride, knowing they had helped others in need.

With all the tzedakah and hands-on support, it's clear we've got more to do, so mark your calendars for Sunday, November 22, 2009 for The Big Give II!

Parashat Vayechi

Genesis 47:28-50:26

As Jacob is dying, he whispers to each of his sons about their character and future. It's his last chance to guide them through life.

Jews are taught to leave more than objects to our children; we're taught to leave words. Nonmaterial inheritance, called an ethical will, began informally almost 4,000 years ago with Jacob, recounted in this week's Torah portion. Formal ethical wills date back to 11th-century Europe.

We spend so much time acquiring wealth and possessions to bequeath to our children. Why not also follow Jacob's example and leave a written account of the values we hope they inherit? I offer mine as a humble example.

Use this as a starting place or start from scratch, but write one. Your children will need your wisdom and words more than anything else you can leave them.

■ Rabbi Steven Z. Leder

Dear Aaron and Hannah,

I want you to know that you and your mother are the joys of my life; all other accomplishments pale. I want you to always be good Jews because then I know you'll be good, charitable, loving, disciplined, decent people.

Live more for today than tomorrow. Be forgiving to a fault. When you do something, do your very best. Tell many jokes. Always try to have enough money so you'll never be afraid of someone else's power over you. But use your money to help the powerless.

Never pick a fight. But if someone picks one with you, don't back down. If you've done good for someone, see it as a small thing. If someone has done you wrong, see that as a small thing, too.

See the world, dance and give. Let good food, warm bread and wine grace your table. Study Torah diligently. Be welcome in each other's homes. Light a yahrzeit candle for Mommy and me when we're gone. Most of all, remember how deeply and eternally I love you.

The Wicked Son

"The world hates the Jews. The world always has and will continue to do so." So says celebrated playwright and novelist David Mamet in this new entry in the Jewish Encounters series as he sets his sights on both anti-Semites and apostate Jews, whom he refers to as "the Wicked Sons." Mamet marshals his passion and mastery of language to argue that only religious observance is an authentic, non-self-hating expression of Judaism.

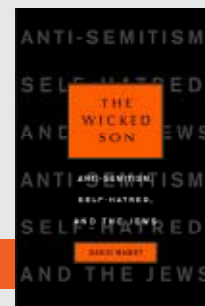

—Publishers Weekly

If you haven't yet read Mamet's book The Wicked Son, get it and take it on. If you're a committed secular Jew, argue with him. If you feel that the openness of America has enriched Jewish life, argue with him. If you feel our "Jewish traits" add dimension to history, culture and your personal identity, argue with him. If you believe that Reform Judaism has a lot to say to the world, take him on.

This isn't an easy book to read, and it might even outrage many Jews and non-Jews. However, Mamet's blunt, passionate assertions have to be seriously considered, and you should consider sharing your view at Wilshire Boulevard Temple's two book salons, hosted in a private home. We have scheduled February 8 and March 15 as opportunities to explore Mamet's analysis of our contemporary Jewish world. Join gifted facilitator Rochelle Ginsberg as she guides two in-depth conversations. Come on, take on The Wicked Son!

■ Rabbi Karen L. Fox

Going Green

Cooking with the Sun

Can you really cook a delicious dinner using the heat of the sun? According to Brawerman third graders, the answer is YES! Guided by science specialist Kate O'Brien, students experimented with three different models of solar cookers (similar to those we sent to Darfur last year) and shared a tasty meal of pasta, tomato sauce, rice, beans, zucchini and green beans. Third-grade chefs invited other classes and amazed them with their solar culinary skills.

STANDING TALL WHAT IS RIGHT

Meet Susan Burton, a recent recipient of a Phenomenal Woman Award at Cal State Northridge (thanks to Professor Shira Brown, aka CLE Program Administrator!). Susan is a kind, sensitive soul who has triumphed over addiction, incarceration, homelessness and despair. Her mission in sobriety “is to do good.” A decade ago, armed with compassion and leadership skills, Susan established A New Way of Life Reentry Project and five sober-living homes. As her nonprofit organization celebrates its 10th anniversary, Susan and her staff of social workers, psychologists, rehabilitation and shelter experts have transformed the lives of more than 250 women and their children so far. She is amazing in her strength of character and dedication.

To help Susan continue her life-changing work, the children of the religious school have “adopted” one of her young women, “Lynn.” We are providing funding for her tuition and book fees. Because of this act of g'milut chasadim, loving kindness, our $800 will assist Lynn in completing her nursing degree. Knowing that our kids are supporting her effort 100 percent, Lynn will be able to fulfill her goal of changing her own life and, in turn, will go into the community as a health care worker to help others change theirs.

Susan says our support “appeared” at just the right moment and gave her, her organization and one of her women exactly what they needed!

Mitzvah gorreter mitzvah—one mitzvah leads to another—and our kids continue to prove it's absolutely true.

Interim Director
